

TRC and Access

Ownership currently resides with the National Department of Justice and Constitutional Development. Ownership of these records will revert to the National Archives once they become archival in nature (i.e. older than 20 years in terms of the NARSSA Act).

Therefore all requests for access to these records should be referred to the Department of Justice and not the National Archives. The Department of Justice evaluate and decide on all TRC requests and correspond with requesters directly.

Some records in the collection (for instance the video and sound recordings of the open hearings and transcripts of the hearings) are in the public domain and are immediately accessible to the public. The Department of Justice also maintains a TRC website with information on the TRC.
